"THE FURNITURE MAN"

... INTENSIVE FARMING ...

HINTS TO THE FARMER

Faint the ladders and set them away in the barn.
Only the wealthy man can afford to keep a poor cow.

A chill brought on by the udder coming in contact with the frosty ground may ruin your best cow.

Shrinkage in milk, lumps in the udder, starting coat, can all be brought on by one night on the frosty ground. All this means loss of hard cash. It doesn't pay.

Keep the stables dry and clean. No animal can thrive if compelled to stand and sleep on a reeking bed of manure.

Many a good man is in such haste to let the world know where he stands on the tariff, reciprocity, and the direct election of Senators, that his patient wife can not find out where he stands on the important domestic questions of water in the house and a new carpet for the parlor. Save the country, brethren; that is right; but don't forget to save the wife, for after all what is the country to you when you have lost a good helpmeet?

If your house was on fire would you throw more fire on it to extinguish it? Foolish, you say? But I've seen people calling themselves men who would try to drive far out of a frightened horse by beating him. Isn't that much the same thing? Seems so to me.—From Oct. Farm Journal.

Steiner's "Immigrant Tide" is a book written with a keen understanding of the stranger within our gates. It shows the influence of the immigrant who returns to his native land and the relation of the various races to our own institutions. It lends interest to the book to remember that Dr. Steiner is of foreign birth and was of Jewish faith but has become a loyal American and a Christian teacher of large usefulness.

Bailey's "Outlook to Nature," "Country Life Movement," "The Farmer and the State," and "The Nature Study Idea" form a set of books helpful in their suggestion of ways for the betterment of rural conditions.

Brigham's "Box Furniture" is full of practical plans for making useful attractive furniture from ordinary wooden boxes. While living in an isolated region the author worked out these plans and furnished her home by means of boxes which she herself made into furniture.

Seton's "Boy Scouts of America" contains not only plans relating to that organization but is full of suggestions for any boy who likes outdoor life and fun. "Rolf in the woods" by the same author is an interesting story about Indian life and woodcraft for boys.

Other new books full of interest are Begbie's "Twice Born Men" Grant's "Peasantry of Palestine," Gillett's "Vocational Education," Bruce's "Daniel Boone and the Wilderness Road," Serviss' "Astronomy with the naked eye," Sabatier's "Life of St. Francis of Assisi," Addams' "Newer Ideals of Peace," Van Dyke's "White Bees" and "The Builders," Birdseye's "Reorganization of Our Colleges," Butterfield's "Country Church and the Rural Problem," Palen's "Meaning of the Idylls of the King," Herrick's "Master of the Inn," Tissot's "Life of Christ." This last named work is a gift from Mrs. Peterson of Chicago and contains very beautiful reproductions of Tissot's famous paintings of the Christ life.

Besides these books of general interest a large number have been added which relate to the work of the students in Bible study, Literature, Biology, Sociology, and Agriculture. All new books, as soon as cataloged, are placed on the loan desk or on the reserve shelves where they are easily accessible.

"Don't wait for success to come in your yard. Grab it by the collar and yank it inside the gate."

"People who do not like the country because there is so little going on, are those in whose heads there is less going on than even in the country."

TO THE NEW COLLEGE BELL

All hail, Thou clanking mandate
We welcome thy beginning.
With power of ancient prelate
Our friendship you are winning.

The voice that preceded you
Had mandatory power;
So send out, as we bid you,
The message from your tower.

Your call will ever be heeded
At start and close of day,
And surely you'll be needed
To teach the better way.

To be always bright and smiling,
And ever to be on time;
Never any hour beguiling—
Friendly, faithful, college chime.

In the first faint gleam of morning,
In the shadows of the night,
We shall hear thy waking warning,
As a harbinger of light.

When thy tongue shall tire of tolling,
And suppressed thy powerful might,
There shall be another—knolling,
Ringing out thy tale of right.

Still maintain thy grand endeavor,
Many hearts you then will reach,
Thru eternity for ever,
This great message you may teach.

LETTER FROM PRES. FROST

I was there again in 1887 to represent Oberlin College at the reunion of its graduates and to speak to the Congregational Club on "College Training for Business Success." The name of Andrew Carnegie was just beginning to be heard of, and we were trying to find out how it should be pronounced. The first two or three tall buildings were just going up.

In 1893 I first went to New York to find friends for Berea College and Mountain people. It was a chilling experience, just at the beginning of the "hard times." I cannot tell how many times I have been there since, but it has always been with a feeling of terrible anxiety and responsibility. Never in all these years have I turned aside from my work for Berea, to visit a friend or to see any of the beautiful sights of the city. Sometimes I have been entertained in the elegant homes of the rich, and sometimes I have stayed for days and weeks in stuffy little chambers at hotels. I have eaten fifteen cent meals near the docks, and five dollar meals at the banquets of the "Southern Society." The outside of New York is very familiar to me, and I could no more be lost in it than I could be lost on Bear Knob. And among the 5,000,000 inhabitants there are probably 500 that may be counted as my friends and friends of Berea.

Last night I crossed the old ferry from 23rd Street to the Erie Railroad station, though I might have gone more quickly through the tunnel, or "tube" as they call it, under the Hudson river. And I thought of those who had crossed with me at other times, grandparents, father and mother, now in Heaven, my son, Stanley, now in Detroit, my wife and children now asleep in Berea.

And I saw the changed city, now all so full of tall buildings that the old church spires are hidden; it would do no good to climb the spire of Trinity Church now. Two new towers stand out against the sky, the "Metropolitan" and the "Singer," and I wonder if they will always be the tallest. And the harbor blazes with electric light, Great signs flash in brilliance and are reflected on the water, "National Biscuit Company," "Butterick's Patterns," "Cunard Line," and a hundred others.

So the city stands and changes, and the people come and go. It is all like a picture or a "tale that is told."

Soon I shall make my last trip on that ferry, perhaps I have made it already. For each one, the greatest city, the most substantial building, is only like a tavern where we eat and sleep, and tarry for a little while, and then take the train.

DEFEAT OF THE GRADED SCHOOL

As the election Saturday to determine whether the Berea Public School should be changed into a graded school progressed, and it became evident that the proposal was defeated, one was made to wonder what had become of the splendid enthusiasm manifested a few months ago at the mass meetings that encouraged the movement. It seemed then that there would be scarcely a dissenting voice, but when the poll was declared Saturday evening only 242 votes had been cast, and of these 155 were against the graded school and 87 for it. The proposition was therefore defeated by a majority of 68.

What and who defeated this splendid proposition? That is not for The Citizen to say but for every one to determine to his own satisfaction. The saddest feature of the voting was the fact that the people who should have been most interested in an efficient public school by reason of the fact that they had many children to educate and were least able to pay for that education were its most determined opponents. Some men when asked by the clerk whether they were for or against the graded school announced with a good deal of gusto, "I am agin it."

On the other hand, it is pleasant to be able to record that many of the people who would have borne the brunt of the matter in the way of taxation, if taxation can ever be called a burden, were for it; and still more pleasing is it to know that nearly all those in connection with the College who voted were for it.

One argument that was made against a better public school, that is the grading of the public school and the erection of new and commodious buildings, was that Berea was already better equipped with schools than any other town in the south, referring of course to the College. Those who made this argument were evidently forgetful of the fact that there are many of the poorer people who do not and possibly some who cannot send their children to the foundation schools. For one in Berea, who is able and who does send his children to the College, to vote against a better public school for those who are most in need of help, as a few did, seems to us to show bad grace and worse citizenship.

We hope to see the time come when the matter will be taken hold of again and then not be allowed to die out in the enthusiasm of the beginning but pushed to a successful termination. Neither the College nor the town can ever expect to be favorably advertised by such public school conditions as we now have.

LIBRARY NOTES

Among the new books added to the Library this fall are a number which are worthy of close acquaintance. Kropotkin's "Memoirs of a revolutionist" is an autobiography both informing and interesting. The author moved in all classes of society and lived an unusually eventful life. He was a scientist and a reformer, and his autobiography forms a dramatic account of one of Russia's great men and also presents a clear picture of Russian life and people.

The "Life of Alice Freeman Palmer" by her husband is a finely written biography of a woman who stood for high things in the education of her sex and who, by the fineness of her mind and the beauty of her spirit, has become an ideal of womanhood with which every girl should be acquainted.
